The assistants are usual from academic magic that pull out the arcane strings through constant study and practical. The result of their hunger for knowledge allows them to control their minds, bring flat beings, throw flames and other mothers that benefit them. And the ways define a sorcerer. They acquire shapes through experimentation, other wizards, ancient tones or old creatures recording them in their spell books. At the contrary of Bard and Wizards, Wizards has a broad selection of willing shapes for the class, as long as they have a shape slots for them. Assistants need to prepare their ways ahead of time it requires prediction. This is why they are considered as the "Swiss Army Knife" of D&D, as they can prepare for any situation. I tried to focus on the usefulness and versatility in this list, as well as some powerful ways. Have fun! NOTE: I organized this list according to the latter of the ways as well. Make sure you always have a damage ready to maximize your damage. Source: The prestidigitator of the player's manual is a clamp country between spell casters. Using this Cantrip allows you to create harmless sensory effects such as faas, musical notes or a strange odor. It can also illuminate or extinguish a small flame, clean or dirty an object, adjust temperatures, change flavors, or create a small bugoganga that can fit your mother. This means you can warm your bed sheet at any time. Or touch the mother when camping. Or maybe make noises boating to distract a guard, or make a poison and good smell. Not a lot of prestidigitator can not do with a little creativity. Source: Player Manual Being 1st level spell, Find Familiar scales well in later campaigns. It allows you to have an Arcana entity (Fey, Fiend, or Celestial) serve you in the form of a familiar and your family have a telepathic connection. As long as your family is not too far away, you can see through your eyes and hear through your ears. Canializing your senses in your family, you also gain your senses as the sight of a bat or the darkness of an owl. You could turn your relative into a raven to send a message, or an octopus to catch the treasure under water. Source: Player Manual A popular spell on the 1st-level spell list, Mage Armor protects an unarmored target willing to wrap them with a magic force, transforming its AC base to 13+ Dexterity Modifier. The duration of Mage's armor is 8 hours and the spell ends once the target puts it in armor. Although they can still use a shield while under the spell effect. This spell is useful when you are ambushed and you have no time to prepare. You can also use this to protect the most vulnerable members of your party, such as the barbarian who insists on fighting naked. Source: Player Shield Manual is a fantastic level 1 spell that creates a magic shield to protect you. It is a reaction, so you can choose if you use it after an enemy makes an attack roller against you. And last until next time. It gives you +5 AC that can surprise enemies when they think you are an easy target. Just note, your decision to use your The shield spell has to be done before your DM rolls for damage. Shield is a lifesaver in forcing enemies to have to deal with your upper AC, and also makes you immune to the magic missile. This makes Shield especially useful when you want to keep a spell that requires concentration. Source: Player Manual Now, this 2nd-level spell is incredibly fun, and yours will always thank you for the free tennis attacks. Invisibility is simple: it transforms a creature you touch invisible. This spell is one of the most powerful spells in the game. This spell is also useful in three dimensions. This also allows you to circumvent problem-like enemies and allow your fighter to get involved in the fight. Source: Player Manual Fly is a great utility. It is a 3rd 3-way wizard that allows your assistant to reach a homeless creature and give them the ability to fly for 10 minutes. Flying makes you look and use land in three dimensions. This means that as long as your ally is above 0 points of life, you can turn them into a T-Rex, giving them 136 points of life in a pinch. And you can have a T-Rex on your side. Source: Xanathar Guide to everything an assistant has many potentially divided skills in games. The sick glow is one of them. A 4th-level spell that may seem uninteresting at first, but if used correctly, it can overthrow powerful enemies. The sick shine creates a 30-foot green light sphere for 10 minutes. If a creature inside it fails in a pitch of constitution economy, they suffer from radiant damage 4D10, emit a dark green light and knock them down by a level of exhaustion. One thing to be observed about exhaustion is that there are 6 levels and since a creature is at the lowest level of exhaustion, they die. To add to this, the more exhausted a creature is, the greater the disadvantage they have with skill checks. Arrest the creature in the area of effect and, if they fail in its constitution, it saves 5 times, it will end. If the creature remains in the effect area during the integer minutes, they need to make 100 economy moves just to stay alive. Easily one of the most brutal ways configured properly. Source: The Animate Objects of the Player Manual became favorite favorites This 5th level spell lets you command objects nearby that aren't worn or being carried by others. You can control up to ten non-magical objects, depending on its size with its own Health, AC, Strength, and Dexterity. Animate Objects could be used to animate gold coins to rip apart an enemy. It could come in handy when your party doesn't have their weapons, and all you have are rocks and sticks. You could also command a boulder to block or unblock a passage way. Source: Player's Handbook Don't underestimate Wall of Force. It's an extremely useful 5th level spell. With it, you can make a magical wall, dome, or sphere. The basic strategy of this spell would be to wall off half of the enemies, so you only have to deal with the other half. Casting the wall on an occupied area lets you push creatures to either side. Physical and Ethereal creatures and objects can't go through Wall of Force, either. Source: Player's Handbook Contingency is a 6th level spell that rewards the prepared. Contingency lets you to use a 5th level spell (or lower) available to you, which you can target yourself with. The spell activates when a circumstance that you describe, actually occurs. Literally a contingency on a D&D campaign. If you're worried about a situation your character might end up in, you can now prepare an answer for that. A great spell to have under Contingency is Dispel Magic, just in case you succumb to magic that can incapacitate you. Source: Player's Handbook Mass Suggestion will give you the ability to undo potential combat encounters by simply suggesting potential enemies to go out of town and enjoy a night of campfire songs. Mass Suggestion is a 6th level spell that lasts up to 24 hours, and can target up to 12 creatures. This could also turn a horrible social interaction at a feast, or a council meeting, just by Mass Suggesting the room into agreeing with you. The spell ends when you give your Suicidal commands. Dark, I know. Source: Player Manual One of the most effective shapes of the 7th is not the forcecage. This creates a mother, immobilized, visible cage, cue that imprisons any creature within the cage area (10ft x 10ft). The form of escape from Forcecage is by mother means, but if they get a laundering of saving. This wizard can be used in combination with other deadly ways. Some examples are Sickenening Radiance, Cloud Kill and other ways that would benefit from an immobilized enemy. Source: Player's Manual in the 7th List of the 7th, the shapes begin to become very strong and simulacrum is particularly powerful. This allows you to make a duplicate of a Beast or Snow Humanoid. This means that you can copy yourself or someone else, which opens many opportunities for Roleplay. The duplicate has half the original health and no equipment. But it carries all the statistics of the original. This also means that they can launch the same ways as the original can. The duplicate will be under its command, but it does not have the ability to learn or become more powerful. Still, simulacrum can be potentially breaking the game, making duplicates of the duplicates of the widon. But you should ask your DM if they allow it. Source: Player's manual yields a powerful assistant or wizard inn' boundary with the 8th shape. Feeblemind inflicts a small amount of 4d6 psan damage, but requires a launch of intelligence savings. If the target fails the laundering of saving, charisma and intelligence spend to 1, making them unable to use mothers, casting, understanding language or communicating. However, they can still identify enemy friend and even protect them. The beautiful thing about Feeblemind is that the creature can only make the launders of intelligence every 30 Source: Player Manual When an assistant has access to 8th, maze is a first fancil choice. You point to a and banish them in a demiplano maze, no rescue throw. The banished creature remains in the maze to be the say of the maid, or that they can escape with an intelligence check of the 20th, [Rias, because for them to spend their action to escape the maze, they take them out of the fight for at least one round. Source: The player's manual easily the most powerful wizard for any assistant, the desire is the wizard of the 9th. There is much whatever you want, you want to be careful when gaining access to it. The basic of desire is that it can double the effects of any way of 8 not or smaller, without having to spend on its components. You can create any mothers that cost at 25,000 gp of value and can not be greater than 300 pages. You can completely heal at twenty creatures, in addition to removing any effects that the greatest restoration can remove. But wait, there is more: you can give to ten resistant creatures to a certain type of damage or make them immune to a specific say for 8 hours. You can also use the desire to do crazy things, such as stopping the regeneration of a tarasque. There is a lot in this sorcerer and with great power comes a great responsibility. ENTY, definitely approaches cautiously. Caution.

Jun 10, 2022 · Pillars of the Earth is a great homage to RPGs from the 1990s. You're surrounded by fleshed-out characters, a rich game world, and solid game mechanics.
